Agde: a greek city where waters meet!

Agde is a town with 2,600 years worth of history and is a place where fresh and salt water mingle, where the Hérault river and the Canal du Midi meet the Mediterranean. Come and wander through its shopping streets and shady walks. Agde is a town of Greek origin and has a maritime history. It used to be called 'Good Fortune' (from the Greek 'Agathé Tyché') and is situated on the banks of the Hérault river and at the foot of the Mont Saint-Loup, the last spur of the Auvergne volcano chain. This geological feature makes its architecture unique in the region: basalt is ever-present in all its buildings.

Location : In the town centre, Pays de Thau
